By this time a cab was waiting in Lombard street, and two of Plammor's men, under the doctor's directions, carried Laker to it. No sooner, now-over, were they in the court than the two watching women they and it was two watching women threw themselves hysterically upon Laker, and it was long before they could be persuaded that he was not being taken to jail. The mother shrieked aloud: "My boy, my boy! Don't take him! Oh, don't take him! They've killed my boy! Look at his head! Oh, his head!" and wrestled desperately with the men, while Hewitt attempted to scothe her, and promised to allow her to go in the cab with her son if she would only be quiet. The younger woman made no noise, but she held one of Laker's limp hands in both hers.

Hewitt and I dined together that evening, and he gave me a full account

Hewitt and I dined together that evening, and he gave me a full account of the occurrences which I have here set down. Still, when he was finished, I was not able to see clearly by what process of reasoning he had arrived at the conclusions that gave him the key to the mystery, nor did I understand the "agony column" message, and I said so. "In the headening "Heath and he was a second to the mystery and the "agony column" message, and I said so.

"In the beginning," Hewitt explained, "In the beginning," Hewitt explained, "the thing that struck me as curious was the fact that Laker was said to have given his own name at Palmer's in buying his ticket. Now, the first thing the greenest and newest criminal thinks of is changing his name, so that the mining of his care against agreed the thing the greenest and newest criminal thinks of is changing his name, so that the giving of his own name seemed unlikely to begin with. Still he might have made such a mistake, as Plummer suggested, when he said that criminals usually made a mistake somewhere—as they do, in fact. Still, is was the least likely mistake I could think of, especially as he actually didn't wait to be asked for his name, but blurted it out when it wasn't really wanted. And it was conjoined with another rather curious mistake, or what would have been a mistake, if the thief were Laker. Why should he consoicuously display his wallet—such a distinctive article—for the clerk to see and note? Why, rather had he not got rid of it before showing himself? Suppose it should be some-body personating Laker? In any case, I determined not to be prejudiced by what I had heard of Laker's betting. A man may bet without being a thief.

"But again, supposing it were Laker. Might he not have given his name and

"But sgain, supposing it were Laker. Might he not have given his name and displayed his wallet and so on while buying a ticket for France, in order to draw pursuit after himself in that direction, while he made off in another, in another name, and disguised? Each supposition was plausible. And in supposition was plausible. And in either case it might happen that, whoeither case it might happen that, who-ever was laying this trail would prob-ably lay it a little further. Charing Cross was the next point, and there I went. I already had it from Plummer that Laker had not been recognized there. Perhaps the trail had been laid in some other manner. Something left behind with Laker's name on it, per-haps? I at once thought of the um-brella with his monoram and, making brella with his monogram, and, making a long shot, asked for it at the lost prop-erty office, as you know. The guess was lucky. In the umbrella, as you know, I found that scrap of paper. That, I judged, had fallen from the hand of the man carrying the umbrella. He had torn the paper in half in order into the loosely flapping umbrolla. It is a thing that will often happen with an omnibus ticket, as you may have noticed. Also, it was proved that the umbrella was unrolled when found, and rolled immediately it was found. So here was a piece of paper dropped by the person who had brought the umbrella to Charing Cross and left it. I get the whole advertisement, as you remember, and I studied it. Yob' is back-slang for 'boy,' and it is often used in nicknames to denote a young, smooth-faced thief. Gunter, the man I suspect, as a matter of fact, is known as the 'Hoxton Yob.' The message then was addressed to some one known by such a nickname. Next, 'H. R. shop roast.' Now, in thieves' slang, to 'roast' a thing or a person is to watch it or him. They call any place a shop—notably a thieves' den. So that this meant that some résort—perhaps the 'Hoxton Row shop'—was watched. 'You Ist there to-night' would be clearer, perhaps, when the rest was understood. I thought a little over the rest, and it struck me that it must be a direction to some other house, since one was warned of as watched. Besides there was the number 197, and 'red bl.,' which would be extremely likely to mean 'red blinds,' by way of clearly distinguishing the house. And then the plan of the thing was plain. You have noticed, propably, that the map of London, which accompanies the postoffice directory, is divided for convenience of reference, into numbered squares?"

"Yes. The squares are denoted by letters along the top margin and figures down it till it intersects horizontal division 5, and there you are."

"I'recisely. I got my postoffice directory and looked for 'O'2.' It was in North London, and took in parts of Abney Park Cennetery and Clissoli Park. Second top' was the next sign. Very well. I counted the second street intersecting the top of the square, intersecting the top of the square I ran my finger down the road. Then 'Stright moniker'—that is to say the proper name, a thief's real naure, in contradistinction to that he may assume. I turned over the directory till I found Hackworth rood, and found that No. 197 was inhabited by a Mr. Merston. From the whole thing I judged this. There was to have been a meeting at the 'II. R. shop,' but that was found at the last moment to be watched by the police for some purpose. So that another appointment was made for this house in the suburbs. 'You let. Then to-night'—the person addressed was to come first, and the others in the evening. They were to ask for the housekeeper's atraight moniker'—Mr. Merston. And they were to come one at a time.

"Now, then, what was this? What theory would fit it? Suppose this were a robbery, directed from flar by the advertiser. Suppose on the day of the robbery it was found that the place fixed for division of spoils were watched. Suppose that the principal thereupon advertised (as has already been agreed in case of emergency) in these torms? The principal in the actual robbery, the 'Yob' addressed, was to go first, with the booty. The others were to come after, one at a time. Anyway, I determined to try No. 197 Hackworth road. I have told you what I found there, and how it opened my eyes. I went, of course, merely on chance, to see what I might chance to see. Buck luck lavored, and I happened see what I might chance to see. Buck luck favored, and I happened doubtless by the thief who had used it, and flung carelessly into the handiest cupboard. That was the gang's mistake."

"Well, I congratulate you," I said. "I hope they'll catch the raecals."

"I rather think they will, now they know where to look. They can exarcely miss Merston, anyway. There has been very little to go upon in this case, but I stuck to the thread, however slight, and it brought me through. The rest of the case, of course, is Plummer's. It was a peculiarity of my commission that I could equally well fulfill it by catching the man with all the plunder, or by proving him innocent. Having done the latter my work was at an end, but I left it where Plummer will be able to finish the job handsomely."

Plummer did, Sam Gunter, Merston and one accomplice was taken—the first and last were well known the police—and were identified by Laker. Merston, as Hewitt had suspected, had kept the lion's share for himself, so that altogether, with what was recovered from him and the other two, nearly £11,000 was saved for Messrs. Liddle, Neal & Liddle. Mersten, when taken, was in the act of packing up to take a holiday abroad and then cash his notes, which were found, neatly packed in separate thousands, in his portmanteau. As Hewitt had predicted, his gas bill was considerably less next quarter, for the latter two months of it he spent in goal. As for Laker, he was reiustated, of course, with an increase of salary by way of compensation for his broken head. He had passed a terrible twenty-six hours in the cellar, unfed and unhoard. Several times he had become insensible, and again and again he had thrown himself madly against the door, shouting and tearing at it until he fell back exhausted, with broken nails and bleeding fingers. For some hours before the arrival of his rescuers he had been sitting in a sort of stupor, from which he was suddenly aroused by the sound of voices and footsteps. Ho was in bed for a month, and required a rest of a month in addition before he could resume his duties. Then he was quietly sound of voices and footsteps. He was in bed for a month, and required a rest of a month in addition before he could resume his duties. Then he was quietly lectured by Mr. Neal as to betting, and, I believe, dropped that practice in consequence. I am told that he is "at the counter" now, a considerable promotion.

THE SHAKERS' IDEAS OF MEDICINE.

Now a days when a man goes to his doctor, he usually told that he has some unheard of disease with a long name, and when he leaves the office he does not know whether it is St.

Witts dance or consumption that is gradually undermining his health.

It is therefore refreshing to talk with the Shakers, for their very simplicity commands confidence and respect, and we have the further satisfaction of knowing that they have devoted themselves to the confidence and respect, and we have the further satisfaction of knowing that they have devoted themselves to the confidence and force. themselves to the study of disease and its cure for more than a hundred years.

The venerable old man whom the writer saw was only too glad to discuss his pet subject. He said that strange as it might seem, very low dectors realized that three-quarters of the most prevalent diseases were all attributable to faulty diseased.

He then went on to say that achild of average intelligence knows that putral peat or decaying vegetables are poisonous, and must be avoided, and yet these same foods, even if taken into the stomach in the freshest possible condition soon decompose unless aligned and aborbed.

In such cases the resulting poisons enter the system, when serbes and pains, weakness and debility soon follow as a natural consequence. It was recognition of this that led the Shakert to devote their energies to the perfection of a product which would stimulate the digestive organs and assist them to perform their proper work.

The first symptom of disordered digestion, is loss of appetite, and the Shaker Digestive Cordial is wonderfully efficient in supplying any deficiency in this respect, at the same time if relieves all distress after eating. Furthermore, as was carefully explained by our venerable friend,
